

AEA – Press Release

AEA EXPANDS IN LONDON

4 JULY 2007

AEA is expanding its energy and environmental consulting services in London with a number of senior experts joining the team in the Capital.

AEA's Central London office is growing rapidly and is providing expert advice to Government, London authorities and the private sector alongside the company's other office bases around the UK and internationally.

AEA provides policy support and programme management solutions including leading edge work in energy, climate change, air quality, sustainable transport, environmental management and resource efficiency.

The London office is headed by Chris Fry who has wide ranging expertise in transport, environmental and sustainability consultancy. Chris joins AEA from TRL where he was the Head of the Centre for Sustainability.

AEA has recently attracted new consultants who are experts in their fields. These include:

- All aspects of energy and climate change from policy to implementation
- Transport policy, environmental impact and emissions
- Emissions inventories and air quality assessment
- Renewable energy
- Marine Environmental
- Resource efficiency
- Energy security

Managing Director, Robert Bell of AEA said; 'It is important to have a strong presence in London to provide our wide range of Government and private sector clients with even greater access to AEA's market leading services.'

'The rapid growth in our operations in the Capital and our ability to attract leading talent is a clear sign of the strength of AEA's position and the strong demand for our expertise.'
