AEA Technology reorganizes executive responsibilities to maximize US opportunities

AEA, the leading energy and climate change consultancy, has reorganized its executive management responsibilities to focus senior resource on its growing, large-scale opportunities in the US market.

As part of this process Robert Bell has become Chief Technical Officer and will concentrate on developing the Group's core competence in climate change, energy and environment for the US market and globally.

Gwen Ventris, Enterprise Development Director, will become Chief Operating Officer for Europe and take over responsibility for group sales and marketing activity.

Mike Nigro will remain as COO in the US and focus on building AEA's position in the US market. All other Board positions remain unchanged.

These changes in management responsibility will take place with immediate effect.
